Photographing harsh climates and endangered species has long been a favorite subject for Andrew Orr - a landscape and wildlife photographer for the past twenty years. For much of the last decade, he's spent hundreds of days photographing in extreme climates such as Antarctica and the deserts of Northern Arizona. Always striving to create unique ways to portray subjects that are difficult to photograph, he has recently completed a portfolio documenting the critically endangered California Condor in the historic and rare platinum /palladium printing process. While not photographing condors, Andrew has traveled several times to Antarctica teaching photography on expedition ships as well as sailed on a 52-day Antarctic expedition on a 100-year-old tall ship.
